MILLINGTON TWP. — Millington United Methodist Church on June 17 welcomed community members to an ice cream social so they could meet church members and enjoy each other's company while eating some homemade goodies.

The event took place for the 35th time.

Cindy Wilson, church member and on the board overseeing this event, stated this is a tradition that started at the Arbela United Methodist Church, also near Millington.

But when the Arbela church closed due to lack of membership, it merged with the Millington United Methodist Church. That's when Millington United Methodist Church members Jan and Dick Meyers — who are chairpersons of the event — suggested they bring the tradition to the Millington United Methodist Church.

The event normally takes place in the third week of June, and members gather beforehand to make the homemade vanilla ice cream. Not only do members provide homemade ice cream — they make homemade strawberry purée as a way to top the goods.

Homemade pie is also available in many flavors.

"We appreciate all the help, it really helps make this event what it is," Wilson said.

Church members hope to keep the annual tradition alive.

"We do this for the community, it's all free," Wilson said. "It's a fun summer event for the community to get together and chat over some homemade goodies."
